Howard Thorne, a Harvard student, has been adopted by Mr. Undercliff, of Undercliff & Monckton, Boston shipping merchants, his own tather, Edgar Thorne, the intimate friend of Mir. Undercliff and confidential clerk of the firm, having disappeared twenty years before, unjustly suspected of having taken a package containing $5,500 from the vault. He salis from San Francisco on the ship Juan Fernandiez, which is never heard from again. Two years later, when the vault is enlarged, the package is found. When the story opens, Captain Latimer, of the firm's brig Naida, has brought from Auckland a draft from Edgar Thorne to reimburse the firm for the amount los, while under his care. Captain Latimer has met a sallor who claims to have been shipperceked on an uncharted island in the house as a sallor who claims to have been shipperceked on an uncharted island in the South-Facility, and to have been rescued by a white man who mysteriously appeared with a shi'n's longboat, and with whom he made the voyage to Auckland. PYTHON SWALLOWED A HOG.

Some men in the Island of Java, the beautiful possession of the New Nether-lands in Asiatic waters, recently got the opportunity to take a most unusual photograph. It made the first picture of its kind ever to be obtained. It was of its kind ever to be obtained. It was that of a monstrous python, which had just swallowed an entire wild hog alive.

The python was almost eighteen feet long and as large around the victor. long and as large around the middle as a man. It had been lying in the shelter of a thicket of small palms and jungle grass, when the wild hog trotted unsuspectingly out. Like lightning the snake's long head struck downward with a hammer-like blow, knocking the sur-prised porker off its feet. Before the animal could rise the great snake had hurled its body ever him, and by the time the pig began to squeal the python had thrown three coils around the vic-tim and cracked its ribs with such force that natives some distance away heard

The python crawled heavily toward the The python crawled heavily toward the woods, but did not succeed in quite hiding away in the undergrowth before it was overcome by the torpidity that assails the big reptiles after they have swallowed prey. So it fell heavily across a little path in the clearing, and there it was photographed by some Europeans who had been brought to the spot by native runners. the pistol-like reports as the bones

Then the big snake-which is not pois-Then the big suake—which bristly hog onous—began to cover the bristly hog onous—began to cover the bristly hog was slippery with saliva, until the body was slippery enough to take into the gullet. Down it slipped, slowly, but steadily, till it lay in the stomach. It distended the big snake so enormously that it looked as if the serpent surely would burst. The spectators could see the outlines of the hog, so closely did the creature fill the body of the snake.
